PREFACE.

SEVERAL years' experience in the publication of the "PHYSICIAN'S DIARY," has convinced the compiler that the success of the enterprise cannot be increased by the addition of any considerable amount of Reading matter. The utility of such a Vade Mecum depends mostly on the convenience of its size. Its objects are to enable the Physician to maintain punctuality in his appointments, accuracy in his accounts, and fidelity in his record of disease. These should not be sacrificed in an attempt to embody in a Pocket Book a compound of practice. Accordingly, the compiler has introduced no extraneous matter to increase the bulk of a book, and has adhered to that simple and convenient arrangement which has hitherto won the favor of the medical public.

Proportionate Doses for Children.

For children under ten years, add twelve to the age and divide by the age ; thus, at three years, the dose will be one-fifth that for adults, viz :

$$\frac{3+12}{3+12+5} = \frac{1}{5}$$

Castor Oil and Calomel require larger proportionate doses.

Opium requires smaller doses ; other exceptions exist, but the rule is good in all ordinary cases.

Poisons.

In all cases of poisoning, evacuate the stomach, either by the active emetics, such as sulphate of zinc, or by the stomach pump. Maintain the vomiting, when produced, by mustard, titillation of the fauces, and warm drinks.

Poisons.
